This is a game FAQ made by Midnight Raven for the game Tokyo Xtreme Racer 2.The only web site that, I will allow to use this game FAQ is my site, www.cheatcc.com, www.gamefaqs.com, www.gamenotover.com, and the people that I pass it out to and have gotten permission to use from me. Passing your copy is allowed but replicating will be another story.

First, I would like to thank all the people who gave me hints that allowed me to beat the game in the game forums. I would also like to thank Kami Kazi who I used his or her wander's requirement. Now to the game, this FAQ for "Tokyo Xtreme Racer 2", will be broken down into three sections. The first section will be the tips and hints part which, will tell you basically what you have to do to meet all the normal racers, bosses, and how to set-up cars to your needs. The second section will be a complete car list with each car's specs and pricing. The third section will be about the rivals' list, which will tell all team leaders, bosses, and wanders info. It will also tell you the requirements for the bosses, and wanders.

Section #1.The first thing I am going to tell you is how to start in the game. What you should do is look for a car that is light but at the same time powerful. The car class that fit in that range are all class B cars which good and cheap. After this just start to race and have fun.

Here are some tips that will help you make a good setting for your car and your style of driving. This will be broken down for each type of chassis set-up.

[FF] cars are good in handling so you really do not need to do anything in making these cars handle better. But if your [FF] car has severe under steer all you have to do to correct it is go to the brake balance area, in the setting screen, and set the brakes more to the back of the car. Another thing you can do is raise the front of the car and lower the back of the car.

[FR] cars are good in handling too but if it has, severe under steer this is what you would do to correct it. First go to the setting screen and set the brake balance to the back of the car. Then if it still has some under steer you have to do is raise the front of the car and lower the back of the car.

[MR] cars corner extremely well or just too much. If you have a car like the Honda NSX, which have some over steer this is what you have to do to correct it. First go to the setting screen and set the brakes balance more to the front of the car. Another thing you can do is to lower the front of the car and raise the back of the car.

[RR] cars corner extremely good at lower speed but at high speed, they are speeding soap bars. They slip like crazy. The way that you can correct this is by setting the brake balance all the way to the front. Then you would have to set the height of the front to the car close to the lowest and set the back of the car almost to the highest point. After that you would have to set both the suspension rebound to the hardest. After that, you will have to set the suspension stiffness to have the front hard and the back soft.

[4WD] Cars corner well and have good balance so do not do to much to the car or you will ruin the cornering of the car.

If you work hard enough with the settings, you will be able to almost tame any car in the game. Even the Porsche but it might need even more tuning to help tame it.

Here are some tips that will help you make a good setting for your car acceleration and speed. It will be broken down into the engine type for example, [NA] and [Turbo].

[NA] cars out of my experience are not as powerful as [Turbo] cars but have good endurance so if you're a person that races for a long period of time then these are the cars for you. Now I will give you some hints in making your [NA] car accelerate or speed to your needs. If you want it to accelerate quick then all you have to do is set your transmission gears more to the left of the gear center. If you want the cars speed higher set the transmission gear more to the right of the center. Remember to always try to balance acceleration and speed out because if you do, it will give you a champ car.

[Turbo] car out of my experience, are very powerful cars so if you like to race quickly then these are your types of cars. Most [Turbo] cars that are highly tuned accelerate quickly so do not worry about the car's acceleration. You should worry more about the car's speed. As you have probably read the way you get speed is to set the transmission gears more to the right of the center.

Section #2. This is the car list area and it will be broken down into Class A,B,C. This is how the car list will be set-up for every vehicle.

#/# Car's name /chassis set-up/# of liter ~# of hp/ weight of car.

All, in total, Tokyo Xtreme Racer 2 has 121 Cars and 44 different car models.

Section #3. This section will explain some of the thing you will have to do to race certain people. It will also have a rival list that will describe most of the racers and give most of their requirements.

To race each boss in this game you will have to drive a car in a certain car class. So if you want to race all the bosses it will take three times through the game. So first, you should start with C class cars. Then in the second time, you start with a class B car. In the third try then use the A class car which you already have.

To race wanders you will have to fulfill each wander's requirement some will want to race a certain car some will want to race depending on the money or miles you have. I will tell you in the wanders part what each of their requirements are.

To race some sub leader in the game you will either have to lose to all team members, win all team members, or win and lose to some team members. The leader himself will race you after you beat all normal team members, or if you beat one of the sub leader.

Each Normal Racer's information will be broken down like this.
