II. Mini-D-Lo Brown Bio & Tidbits

Real Name:

Former identities, names, nicknames: D-Lo Brown(WWF, 1996-Current)

Major Titles Held: WWF European Title(4), WWF Intercontinental Title

Former Ring Escorts: He escorted other Nation members to the ring while he was part of the NoD(WWF, 1996-1998), Ivory(WWF, 1999)

D-Lo debuted at the 1996 Survivor Series when he accompanied Faarooq to the ring as a bodyguard for the newly formed, Nation of Domination. His biggest moment as a bodyguard was probably getting piledrived on a car by Ahmed Johnson on the first episode of Shotgun Saturday Night in January 1997. Faarooq fired all NoD members in June 1997, but D-Lo and D-Lo started to wrestle. D-Lo wasn't in any big feuds at the time, but was just mostly a Nation lacky. One of his weirdest things he done was at the 1998 Royal Rumble match he attacked all of his NoD allies for no reason. D-Lo won his first WWF gold when he defeated Hunter Hearst Helmsley for the European Title on a July episode of RAW with help from the Rock. D-Lo held onto the belt for two months until losing it to X-Pac in September, but D-Lo regained it a couple of weeks later in October, but lost it a couple of weeks later back to X-Pac at the October 1998 PPV: In Your House: Judgement Day.

D-Lo and Marc Henry started to tear up the tag team scene in 1998 and 1999, and were in a few tag title matches in 1998 and 1999, but never won the gold, even with help from their new manager, Ivory. D-Lo's single career again started to rise. He won the European Title a third time, when he defeated Mideon for the belt at the July PPV: Fully Loaded, and 2 days later he won the Intercontinental belt from Jeff Jarrett. At Summerslam he defended both of his belts against Jarrett, and Henry turned on him and D-Lo lost both of his belts. The next month at the September PPV: Unforgiven, D-Lo won the European Title from Marc Henry, he held onto it for a month before losing it to the British Bulldog on an October episode of Smackdown. D-Lo got a couple of rematches for the European Title, but lost at them, but he still has his best days ahead of him and more WWF gold waiting for him.
