3.) Controls/Basics
=========================================================================

Control Stick:
Move players while fielding; move ball while pitching; choose/cycle options

Control Pad:
Move players while fielding; move ball while pitching; choose/cycle options (sound familiar?)

L - Button:
See Z-Button.

R - Button:
Go back to previous base while ball in play; hold ball for catcher to pick-off runner(s)

Z-Button:
See L-Button (just joking) Get lead-off; tap 3 times to attempt a steal; tap with C-Button to make certain players go to certain bases whilst the ball is in play; run to base while ball is in play; hold while pitch is made to make catcher pick-off runner(s).

C - Up:
Choose pitch in game; press and hold makes help menu appear while in a menu.

C - Right:
Choose pitch in game.

C - Down:
Choose pitch in game; make a sliding catch.

C - Left:
Choose pitch in game.

Start Button:
Pause during game; select during menu

A Button:
Swing during game; contact swing (when hitting mode is set on easy) slide (while baserunning) during game; dive for ball (while fielding) during game; select during menu

B Button: Set power Swing Mode on; power swing (when hitting mode is set on easy); jump/wall catch (while fielding) during game; go back to previous screen during menu

The help menu will show a detailed account of what controls can be used for what menus while you're in a menu screen.

4.) Teams

This part of the guide deals with the teams (obviously). I will give you the team's starting lineup, its starting pitchers, its closer, its position players, and a grade of how good it is. NOTE: In interleague play, the DH's come in affect to the National League, and the DH's come off of effect in the American league. I put the DH's for the AL teams, and left the 8 position players for the NL. Also, in each league, there will be a best of every position in my opinion. Example: Best Third Baseman, Best Catcher, etc.

5.) Hitting

Well, this section deals, of course, with hitting. Anyway, you should focus a lot on hitting. You should have at least one fantasy all-star (like Mike Piazza or Chipper Jones). Also, you need a guy that can hit over. 310, or at least .300, a guy with 35+ homers, and a guy with 100+ RBIs. Also, don't just get one all-star and leave the rest to be really bad players. You should have a balanced lineup 1-8 (or 1-9 in AL) in the batting order. Now that you've built your team, here are some strategies about playing with it. Well, first and foremost, you shouldn't always try to get a home run. Usually this results in a pop-up in the outfield. Sometimes you get a home run, but that's when you use guys like Ken Griffey, Jr., Sammy Sosa, etc. The only times you should try to hit a home run is with your strongest guys, usually your 3rd and 4th hitters. However, with the whole rest of the lineup you should try to get a well-placed line drive. You should always take a look at the infield and outfield. Finding a hole and trying and hit it there is the next step. This way, if you get a lot of baserunners, you'll drive in more runs. However, what if you're a weak hitter trying to get the runner over, but you're left-handed, the hole is on the right side and the pitch is tailing away from you, then try to just get the bat on the ball. You might get to first, if not the runner will advance. If you're a weak hitter and runner, then send the runner, and just make contact (this is called the hit and run technique). If you're a power hitter, you have to know that they're going to pitch around you. However, you should work a deep count, and figure out what pitches do what. Then, you can guess the next pitch, and if you're right, you'll probably get a big hit.

6.) Pitching

In my opinion, pitching is the most important aspect of the game. You have to have good pitching staff to be successful. The best pitching staff I can think of is that of the Braves. They've got Maddux, Glavine, Smoltz, Millwood, and Chen. Anyway, here are some helpful tips to be a good pitcher:

Don't allow hitters to guess your pitches. Use different pitches in different orders to do this.
Don't be afraid to intentionally walk someone, except when the bases are loaded.
Always go after the hitters.
Don't be afraid to pitch inside.
Learn how your pitches break, their speeds, and how your pitches will make you successful, and you'll be a great pitcher. One way to do this is to play an exhibition game.
Try not to work a deep count to smart hitters, or else they might be able to guess your pitches.
Don't always throw a pitch right down the middle on a 3-0 count. Many good hitters will swing if they find a good 3-0 pitch to hit. However, make sure if they don't swing, it'll be a strike.
On an 0-2 pitch, don't throw a good one.
Pitch with 2 balls as you would with 3 balls.
10. Don't pitch too many complete games.
11. When your stamina is low, keep on working, but have someone out in the bullpen. Even if the hitters are able to guess your pitches, the control you have left, will baffle them. But if they take a lot of balls, switch the pitcher.
12. Don't hit three hitters (you'll be ejected from the game and won't be allowed to come back and play during the game at all.
13. Don't try too much to get a strikeout.
14. As Greg Maddux once said, "I'm trying to make strikes look like balls and balls look like balls," or something like that. Use his little speech when your pitching.

7.) Fielding

Fielding is one of those things that isn't too important, but you still need some of it. Really all I have to say is just use your brains.
Also, use some good fielders. Don't just use good hitters to field!

8.) Season

The Season is the mode that is the most important. You can go to the playoffs from there, and if you get through that, it's World Series time! Just be sure to use the tips I gave you for Hitting, Pitching, and Fielding. Also, be sure to take a close look at your players. If they aren't doing well, you might want to trade or send the back to the minors. If you do, you might want to create a player. If they're doing well, look at how they managed their success, and try to provide more successful things. Example: If you were the Atlanta Braves, and Andruw Jones was hitting awesome in the 2nd spot of the lineup, while Reggie Sanders was hitting awful in the 2nd spot, you might want Andruw and Reggie to switch places. Also, be sure to remember that you're not only the player, but you're also the manager. Always have a balanced team.
Don't focus on any one thing too much. Example: If your team batting average is .333, but your pitchers' combined ERA is 10.03, go ahead and trade an all-star hitter for a pitcher with an ERA under 4.00. Maybe you think that's a bad idea because that all-star hitter is hitting .396, but remember that the rest of your team is doing well, too, and you really need a good pitcher to win. If you do trade, and you have good fielders, you have a very good chance for a world championship team. All right, flip the page.

===========================================================================
9.) General Manager
===========================================================================

This is a VERY important part of the game. It lets you trade players, send em back to the minors, bring em up to the majors, and create them.
First let's start with the Create-A-Player mode. Well, the title really tells you everything, but I'll give you hints to create a great player:
1.) If you have a player struggling at his position, and you don't have very good backups at his position, create a player at the struggling person's position.
2.) Don't make your team full of created players.
3.) If your created player is struggling, throw him into the minors.
4.) When you go to the screen where you get to decide if he's strong, fast, etc., look at what your team really needs, and make him strong in that category. Example: If your team has 5 stolen bases at the all-star break, make your player very fast.
5.) Don't make your player 3 years old!!
Now it's time for signing/releasing players. Before you sign them, make sure they're doing better than the player you're releasing. Also, remember to sign a few created players here and there. I really can't think of many more hints, but you're probably not gonna sign/release players that much.

Now for trading. When you're about to trade, first think about the main people you're trading. Let's say you had Andy Ashby, but he wasn't in Cy Young form, but he was still okay. Let's also say you saw that Greg Maddux was doing awesome, and was having a tremendous year. Well, what you should do is first write down Andy Ashby in one column, and Greg Maddux in another. Find out if the computer will trade with you. If not, and it'll probably not, either override that decision or find out another great player having an okay year like Tom Glavine. Well, then you'll be trading Glavine and Ashby for Maddux, which isn't a good deal for you. So then think of a okay minor league prospect, and put that in the column with Glavine and Ashby. Well, now it's an even worse deal for you, so in the column that has Maddux put down a pretty good player like Ryan Klesko. So then try to trade Ashby, Glavine, and a minor league prospect for Maddux and Klesko. But before you try that trade, try taking away the minor league prospect. If the trade works, be happy at what you're getting. If it doesn't, it still is a good deal even when giving away a minor league prospect. Anyway, use those tips to be successful at trading. Also, if you've made up your mind that you're definitely gonna trade people and override any rejected ones, be sure to check out my best lineups and starting rotation. Use a team similar to that one to easily win the World Series.

===========================================================================
10.) Home Run Derby
===========================================================================

This is really a lot of fun. For those of you who don't know what a home run derby is, well, listen up. The home run derby is when all you're trying to do is hit a homer. It's either a homerun or an out. If you don't swing it counts as nothing. You get to choose how many outs and players you play with. There are an equal number of players from the American League as well as the National League. After one round is completed, the four best, two best, or the winner goes on to the next round depending on how many players you chose. If you chose two players, the game is over. Anyway, in the second round, whoever gets the most homers goes on to the third round. If you chose 4 players in all, the game is over. In the third round, whoever gets the most homers is the winner. Now some tips:

1.) Try to get under the ball a little bit.
2.) Always use powerful players.
3.) Wait for a pitch you can cream; there are no balls/strikes, and unless you swing, it counts as nothing.
4.) DON'T BUNT!! (Even though you can't).
5.) Find out which field your player is good at hitting to, and hit it there.
6.) Find out the power alley (the shortest part of the ballpark), and try to hit it there.
7.) Before you take your swing, tap B to put the Power Swing Mode on.
Get under the ball, and you'll homer a guaranteed 6 out of 7 swings.

Okay, we're done.

11.) Statistics

You should always pay attention to statistics. The main statistics are:

Pitchers:
Wins, Losses, ERA, Opponents Average, WHIP, Innings Pitched, Strikeouts, and Walks.

Hitters:
Batting Average, Homeruns, Hits, Slugging Percentage, Doubles, Triples, Strikeouts, and Walks.

Fielders:
Errors, Assists, Putouts, Double Plays, Triple Plays and Fielding Percentage.

Now it's time for me to tell you what the statistics mean:

Pitchers:
Wins - How many times a pitcher gets the win in a game.
Losses - How many times a pitcher gets a loss in a game.
ERA - Earned Run Average. How many earned runs you average per game.
You divide Innings Pitched by Earned Runs given up.
Opponents' Average - Hits yielded divided by at-bats for opponents.
WHIP - How many base runners you average per inning. (Walks + Hits) divided by Innings Pitched.
Innings Pitched - How many innings you pitch.
Strikeouts - How many strikeouts you pitched. (DUH) Walks - If you don't know the answer, you don't know how to play this game. It's how many walks you pitch.

Hitters:
Batting Average - Hits divided by innings pitched. It tells you, in decimals, the percent of times you get a base hit. Example: If you're hitting .343, you get a base hit 34.3% of the time.

Homeruns - How many homers you've hit.
Hits - How many base hits you've got.
Slugging Percentage - Total Bases divided by At-Bats.
Doubles - How many doubles you've got.
Triples - How many triples you've got.
Strikeouts - How many times you've struck out.
Walks - Go ask your mother. How many walks you've got.

Fielders:
Errors - Every time you bobble the ball or something.
Assists - How many times you assist in getting an out.
Putouts - How many times you're the last player in a play, which resulted in an out.
Double Plays - When you get two outs in one play.
Triple Plays - When you get three outs in one play.
Fielding Percentage - The percentage of you not getting an error.

Finally, I'm done with these obvious things. Let me tell you something about statistics. Stat, Inc. makes the best stats for games.

Now, I'm going to give you the top statistical leaders for hitting and pitching for the 1999 and 2000 seasons:

-1999-

Batting Average (300 minimum at-bats):
1.) Larry Walker   -   .379

=======================================================================
24.) NChipperJones19's Best Starting Lineups
=======================================================================

I am going to give you two lineups, on with the DH and one without, starting with the one without.

  1.) Roberto Alomar (2B)    -  CLE
  2.) Chipper Jones (3B)     -  ATL
  3.) Ken Griffey, Jr. (CF)  -  CIN
  4.) Alex Rodriguez (SS)    -  SEA
  5.) Mark McGwire (1B)      -  STL
  6.) Mike Piazza (C)        -  NYM
  7.) Sammy Sosa (RF)        -  CHC
  8.) Barry Bonds (LF)       -  SF
  9.) Pedro Martinez (SP)    -  BOS

Well, the best 2B is Alomar, and he's really fast so I put him leadoff.
Chipper is the best 3B, and he can run okay, and has great power, so I put him 2nd. A-Rod is definitely the best SS, and he can hit, so I could put him either 3rd or clean up. I went ahead and put him Clean-Up, and so Griffey, Jr. would hit 3rd. He is probably the best hitter in the majors right now and he's only 31. Big Mac does have lots of homers, but I thought A-Rod could put up better numbers, so I put McGwire 5th. Piazza or Sosa? PIAZZA. He has an awesome average, many homeruns, a ton of RBIs, and he's 31 years of age. He is great, and he's better than Sosa. Next, of course is Sosa. Walker or Bonds? Bonds.

Barry has more homers, more RBIs, more runs, and more Stolen Bases.
Last, is Pedro.

1.) Craig Biggio (2B)       -   HOU
2.) Chipper Jones (3B)      -   ATL
3.) Ken Griffey, Jr. (CF)   -   CIN
4.) Alex Rodriguez (SS)     -   SEA
5.) Jeff Bagwell (1B)       -   HOU
6.) Manny Ramirez (RF)      -   CLE
7.) Ivan Rodriguez (C)      -   TEX
8.) Larry Walker (LF)       -   COL
9.) Rafael Palmeiro (DH)    -   TEX

I'm a NL guy, so I needed some help for this one. Miliman456@aol.com and I still made a good lineup with the DH, though. For Biggio, he's awesome, so I had to find room for him. If you are going to be an AL team, and you'll use the DH a lot, I recommend you using Biggio for the times when you're w/o the DH, and use Alomar for the times with the DH.
For Jones, check the lineup w/o the DH to find out why I put him as the 2nd place hitter. Okay, Griffey usually hits 3rd, so that's where I put him. A-Rod would be good hitting clean up at an AL park, because he has lots of experience doing that. Bagwell might be a worse 1B than McGwire, and even though McGwire had 70 HRs that '98 season, I had to put Bagwell in there. If you are an AL team though, and you have the DH most of the time, put McGwire in there and put Bagwell in a lineup w/o the DH. What's left? Catcher, Left Field, and Right Field. Well, I had to find a good right fielder in the AL, so I picked Ramirez. The RBI king is GREAT. Okay, who's the best AL Catcher? Duh. Pudge had an awesome year last year. I had to let Walker have a chance, but I also had to put him 8th. Palmeiro is, of course, the best DH in the game. I had to put him in because he deserves it. He was second in the AL in HRs, behind some unknown guy named Ken Griffey, Jr.

Well, I guess that's it. Now the best starting rotation. Decisions, decisions...

25.) NChipper10's Best Starting Rotation
= =

1.) Pedro Martinez
2.) Greg Maddux
3.) Randy Johnson
4.) Roger Clemens
5.) Kevin Millwood

Well, Pedro Martinez is the best, so I had to put him first. Then comes the hard part: Maddux, Johnson, Clemens, Millwood, or Brown? Well, I had to put Maddux because of all of the groundball outs and Ks he gets and because of his awesome ERA and WHIP. The reason I didn't pick Johnson is because he walks a lot of batters. The reason I picked Johnson over Clemens is because both of their weaknesses are that they walk too many hitters, and I think Johnson has better stuff. Okay, you're probably wondering why I picked Millwood over Brown. Well, Brown has awesome stuff, but Millwood held opposing hitters to a major league-best .202 average with a 2.68 ERA, while Brown had a 3.00 ERA and allowed 210 hits. Overall, Millwood is AWESOME. And in ASB 2001, you would like him on your team.
