=====
Introduction:

I've always found it a pleasant surprise when enemies sometimes dropped items after a battle. Sometimes they're ordinary, but once in a long while, a monster will drop a really cool item. Especially so in this hard-type version, where many items "dummied-out" for the US realease are again available, making for a much richer experience. This version makes it even harder to discover all items dropped by all of the monsters. Luckily, though, a much simpler way was found. This information is derived directly from the game's data tables, so it is highly unlikely that there are any mistakes here. If there are, it's probably my fault. =) If that's the case, let me know.

Layout:

The monster names are in the left column, listed in alphabetical order. The other four columns list the four different items that a monster can drop. At the top of those item columns are the odds of a monster dropping the item listed in that column.

A "*" character appearing at the end of a line indicates that the monster always drops an item. Blank entries mean that the monster drops nothing.

Notes:

This document only attempts to list what items monsters drop after battle. For other information, like where to fight the monsters or what all of these items do, please consult one of the many FAQs available. A good place to find them is at www.gamefaqs.com.

As far as what items can be stolen from enemies with Edge's "Sneak" command, suffice it to say that in nearly all cases, it's the item in the 1st column. I'm not attempting to impart that information here, so don't hold me to it. =>
